A Tool Kit for Native Garden Design

Jennifer White

Wild Ones, a nonprofit that promotes native landscapes, has been running a Grow Where You Are campaign to spotlight the impact of native plants and pollinator-friendly landscapes. They have a free tool kit available for download that includes fliers for events and public spaces, social media graphics and suggested content, and more.

Wild Ones hopes to boost participation in their Certified Native Habitat Program through Grow Where You Are. You'll also find a collection of city-specific garden designs and plant lists on their website at
