Rosy Soil Adds Herb Mix

Jennifer Polanz

I got word recently that Rosy Soil, a soil company that specializes in peat-free options, added a new Herb Mix to its lineup of houseplant and specialty mixes.

“Our Herb Mix features a fun new input, recycled paper, to create a light and fluffy texture that is great for herbs and seed starting,” said Marketing Manager Maddi Cislo, who added it also includes nutrient-rich compost, biochar and mycorrhizae to create a well-draining soil. “Whether you’re sowing seeds, potting up starts or giving your tired herbs a fresh start, Herb Mix delivers vibrant growth, fewer pests and more snip-worthy harvests.”

Maddi also let me know they’re creating a new look for their packaging that will debut in the summer, so watch out for that. Find out more at rosysoil.com. GP
