Arett Sales Investing & Expanding

Jennifer Polanz

Arett Sales—a lawn, garden, home and holiday distributor—just celebrated its 75th anniversary at its annual event in Atlantic City, and recently announced it's also investing in expanded distribution capacity, staffing and product availability in its bid to increase its national distribution network.

Arett has had its Fairfield, California, distribution center since 2024, and has now also identified facilities in Southern California and the Pacific Northwest, according to a September 29 media release, that align with the company's operational and distribution requirements. It's working toward securing additional locations to build out the Western distribution network.

Arett also has operations in Connecticut and Ohio—both of which are expanding in additional capacity through targeted investments in workforce and infrastructure. It's also finalizing plans to expand warehouse capacity in the Midwest to “support continued growth and provide additional inventory and operational flexibility.”

The company has added multiple sales and key accounts managers throughout segments of the U.S. and expanded customer and operational support, as well.

“We are making these investments with a clear goal—to give our customers and vendor partners greater inventory availability, stronger local support, increased distribution capacity and the level of service they expect from Arett,” said Arett President Noah Chesbrough in the announcement. GP
